Does physically surviving a gunfight mean you won? Not by a long shot. Many people survive gunfights. In fact, most people who are in a gunfight survive. But there is a difference between surviving and winning. Surviving means you continue to exist. Continuing to exist and winning are not the same. Everyone who carries a gun for personal protection or the protection of others needs to understand what they will face before, during, and after a gunfight. This eight-hour seminar based on Winning a Gunfight helps prepare the modern warrior to win in the event they face a deadly foe.

Every student receives a copy of Winning a Gunfight, foreword by Lt. Col. Dave Grossman.

This eight-hour seminar will prepare students to:

1. Understand the reasoning, history, and principles for being prepared for a deadly force encounter.
2. Understand the importance of being prepared ethically, mentally, and tactically for a gunfight.
3. Understand what a person may experience physiologically and psychologically during and after a gunfight.
4. Be encouraged to take the steps necessary to further prepare him/herself for a gunfight.
5. Instructor-students will learn how to include the reasoning and history behind tactics and use of force training.
6. Instructor-students will understand the importance of including decision making, force-on-force, reality based training scenarios to prepare officers to face interpersonal human aggression.
